With ear stretching, you can easily enlarge your earlobes, enabling you to wear awesome ear jewellery, including flesh tunnels. Stretching of piercings has been a common phenomenon in several civilisations throughout history. In the early periods, people used wood, stone and many other sharp-shaped materials to facilitate their stretching. But, the process is not as easy as it seems. You need to follow many tips when stretching your earlobes to make sure you do not get your earlobes infected. Firstly, when preparing for stretching, ensure that you use an excellent antibacterial soap without perfume to clean your earlobe. Remember that cleaning your earlobe is important at every step of ear stretching. In addition, you will also require some lubricant, such as jojoba oil with excellent skin condition properties to prepare the sensitive skin for the procedure. Now coming to the process of gauging your earlobes, you can use any of the two methods: taper method or teflon method. In the taper method, a tapered rod is inserted into the piercing. There are several types of tapers available in the market. You can choose any depending on the diameter of the gauge size you wish to achieve. Another way is to use non-adhesive teflon tape around the pin of the ear jewellery and push it through your earlobe. Remember to stop right away if you experience any sort of pain or bleeding and allow your ear to heal properly before you start trying again. If you continue stretching without allowing your ear to heal, it can tear your skin, which can make it even more difficult to stretch later on. If you are using a flesh tunnel, continue stretching your earlobes till the time the diameter reaches an appropriate size. The after-care precautions that you must follow are pretty straightforward. Do not wear any stretch jewellery until your ear has completely accepted the new-size hole. It is important that your stretched skin is thicker and harder. It can take a lot of time- even three times more than it took to heal your original piercing.
